U.S.M.C. RUSSIAN SHOULDER KNOTS:

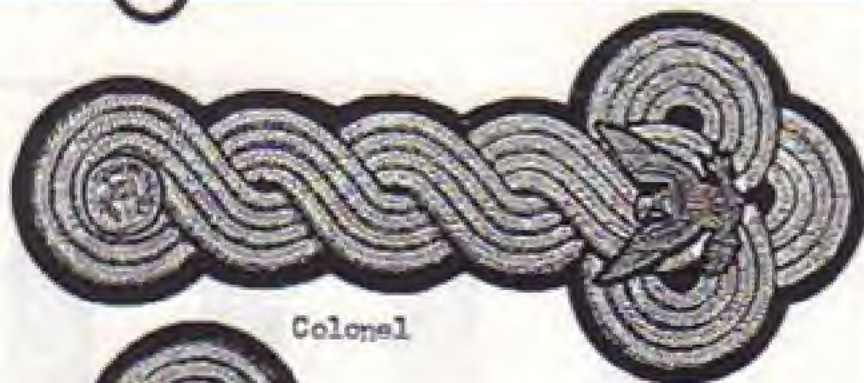

Illustrated Catalogue of Arms & Military Goods SCHUYLER, BARTLEY & GRAHNS (1864) describes these on page 117 as follows :

351. Officers. — All officers shall wear on each shoulder of the undress coat, and undress white linen coat, a shoulder knot of fine gold three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, the shoulder knot to consist of a twisted strap, and an end of a clover leaf shape; the clover leaf end to be lined with scarlet cloth, to show through the openings; the twisted strap to be also lined, only so as to show through the openings; there will be no cushion under the end which rests on the shoulder and the twisted strap extending from thence up to the coat collar; the knot fastened by a small Marine button, and tags at the collar; and at the shoulder two tags; tags to pass through the cloth of the coat and tie on the inside.

The Commandant wore a strap that had four cords twisted, and this had a small embroidered star, it is not shown here. Colonels and majors also had 4 cords, but the was substituted for a gold leaf on the knot of a major; silver leaf for lieutenant colonel; a silver spread eagle for colonel. Captains and lieutenants had 3 cords twisted. Captain had only 2 silver bars while first lieutenant had one silver bar, while a second lieutenant it was plain & without any bars.

Page 51 depicts these knots. The first knot for major was plain I am told. If anyone has any info or corrections, we welcome your input in these matters.

DAVID GLASGOW FARRAGUT (1801-1870)

Union naval officer in the American Civil War; hero of the battle of Mobile Bay, Alabama. In 1810 a boy 9 years of age entered the service of the U.S. Navy in the rank of midshipman, and began one of the most famous careers in American naval history.

He was born near Knoxville, Tennessee. He served in the War of 1812. In 1841 was promoted to commander and a few years later to captain. Promoted to rear admiral in 1862 and to vice admiral in 1864 and admiral in 1866 and kept that rank until his death in 1870.

He was the first U.S. naval officer to hold the flag ranks of rear admiral, vice admiral and admiral. David Glasgow Farragut served almost fifty years as a sailor.

During the Civil War the sleeve stripes for officers were completely changed no less than three times! We'll examples of those changes in a future issue.

David Dixon Porter (1813-1891) was the second person to be VADM (1866-1870) and ADM (1870-1891). He had commanded the Mississippi Squadron in the War Between the States.

Born in Chester, Pennsylvania; his father was a naval commander; both father and son served in the war with in 1845. He captured by the Spanish forces in that war. After the War for State's Rights and Southern Independence, he was superintendent of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland.

Cameron McRae Winalow (1854-1932) became the third person to become full admiral in 1915 to 1916.

The Phoenix Exchange, Volume 2, Number 1, in their Winter Issue 1988, did an article on the headgear worn by naval officers in WWI (page 10). The above cap was used in the winter by chaplains who were commander & captain, while the one below was worn in the summer by Lieutenant (Junior Grade) to Lieutenant Commander. Both caps had black mohair chin straps, and CDR's & CAPT's had black mohair trim on their cap's visor. You will still be able to get back issues like this and others by writing to: Military Collector Magazine (FE Back Issues) Postal Box 245, Lyons Station, PA 19536. COMMISSIONED OFFICERS—RANK AND CORPS

WARRANT OFFICERS—RANK AND SPECIALTY

ENLISTED MEN—RATING AND SPECIALTY

These insignia are shown as they appear on a blue uniform. Commissioned and warrant officers have gold-embroidered insignia; the insignia for enlisted men are white on red. An officer's rank is shown by the number and size of stripes; the star indicates a line officer (gunnery, navigation, or other combat duty). Officers of other corps wear their device in place of the star. Seamen or firemen who do not have a rating and specialty wear a white or red tape around the shoulder.

ERROR:

In issue #5 I incorrectly had identified the gold lace Apothecary Chief as belonging to D.F.Sullivan when it belongs to Steven A. Woll! Issue #7's cover rate which I said was from Les Tucker, it was not!!! This too was from Steve. I suggest everyone pencil in their initials, or their names on all photocopies. Steven said he doesn't consider it (#7 cover) to a correct 1897, this may have been an error in the transition and a hangover that uniform regulation changes??? My apologies to Steven & others for any errors.

This image displays a collection of 42 numbered military rank insignia, arranged in a grid. The insignia are categorized by rank, with numbers 1 through 10 representing various officer ranks, 11 through 24 representing non-commissioned officer (NCO) ranks, and 25 through 42 representing enlisted ranks. The symbols used include crowns, anchors, wings, crossed tools (like hammers and axes), and various heraldic devices. The background of the insignia varies, with some being white on a dark background and others being dark on a light background.

COMMODORE FARRAGUT.—[FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY HOLMES, 204 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.]

COMMODORE FARRAGUT, U.S.N.

FLAG-OFFICER DAVID G. FARRAGUT, the Commodore of the fleet now before New Orleans, is a native of the State of Tennessee, and is about sixty-three years of age. He is a citizen of his native State, and was appointed to the United States Navy from that State. He entered the service as a midshipman when a mere child, his warrant bearing date December 17, 1819. He was first on board the Racco, under the respectable Commodore David Porter, and served with him also in the expedition around Cape Horn in 1812. After ten years of an adventurous life, in the year 1820 we find him still a midshipman on board the Franklin, a seventy-four-gun line-of-battle ship. On the 15th of January, 1825, he was commissioned a lieutenant. In 1831 Lieutenant Farragut was ordered to act as Assistant Inspector of Ordnance, being second in command under Commodore Salmon. This position he held until after the end of the year 1832.
